

JAYHAWKER CANYON

Looking down towards Black Point from where we parked for Jayhawker Canyon:

Jayhawker Spring:

Looking down-canyon from the spring (this was my first trip with my new camera, so as I hadn't yet learned how to use it, the photo didn't turn out well):

Looking down canyon from just past the “narrows” section, which are not very narrow but are still a welcome change from the wide-open canyon with no shade:

Looking up-canyon from just past the “narrows”; from here on, the canyon appears to be quite shallow, so we decided not to explore further up the canyon. As can be seen in the photo, there was some small patches of snow on the ground here:

The Emigrant Canyon Road can be seen in the middle of this photo from the ridge just to the east of Jayhawker Canyon:

