

PARADISE VALLEY: LAKE ANNETTE AND THE GIANT STEPS

Map of the Paradise Valley trail:

The incredible scenery begins shortly before the junction with the Mt. Fairview trail:

Looking towards Mt. Temple:

View up Paradise Creek:

As we continue up the trail we get increasingly good views of Mt. Temple:

Lake Annette is a great place to stop for Second Breakfast:

The trail continues to gain elevation past Lake Annette, and we get increasingly good views:

Panorama of the Paradise Valley, with Mount Aberdeen, Haddo Peak, and Sheol Mountain in the center and the Horseshoe Glacier far to the left:

A closer look at the Horseshoe Glacier area, which looks like a great place to hike to someday (although due to the length of the hike out to the Giant Steps, it would be a long day-hike to continue beyond to the glacier):

Zooming in on the Giant Steps waterfalls:

In this meadow-y clearing we spotted the first porcupine of the day:

Shortly beyond, we entered the trees again and spotted another porcupine. This one seemed to be posing for a photograph:

There was a nice meadow we hiked through here, although it was very wet and muddy:

The trail joins with the trail down from Sentinel Pass, and switchbacks down to cross a tributary of Paradise Creek:

Looking up towards the Horseshoe Glacier and peaks above it; at this point it started to rain:

The remainder of the route (past the campground) to the Giant Steps is boardwalk:

Looking down Paradise Creek and towards Lake Annette (behind the trees, to the right) from the top of the main Giant Steps waterfall:

There were numerous cracks in the rock like this one, where water was pouring in and flowing down to another level (step):

One can scramble around the Giant Steps area to get different views of the main falls and the smaller falls surrounding it; in looking back at the zoomed-in photo taken earlier, it seems that I didn't hike down far enough to get the best photos:

The uppermost fall of the Giant Steps:

This waterfall with Mount Lefroy in the background:

Looking out towards Mt. Temple (right) and where Lake Annette is located:

This is the view towards Sentinel Pass; notice the interesting rock formations to the right in this photo:

Looking up-stream above the Giant Steps; it would be an interesting hike to follow this creek up to the lakes near Horseshoe Glacier:

The rock formations atop the falls were quite interesting:

Heading back down below the upper falls to get more photos:

There was a lot of water pouring over the falls, probably helped by the fact that it was raining steadily now (and it appeared to have been raining up by the glacier earlier):

Looking down the falls from the top:

The Giant Steps waterfalls area certainly is very nice:

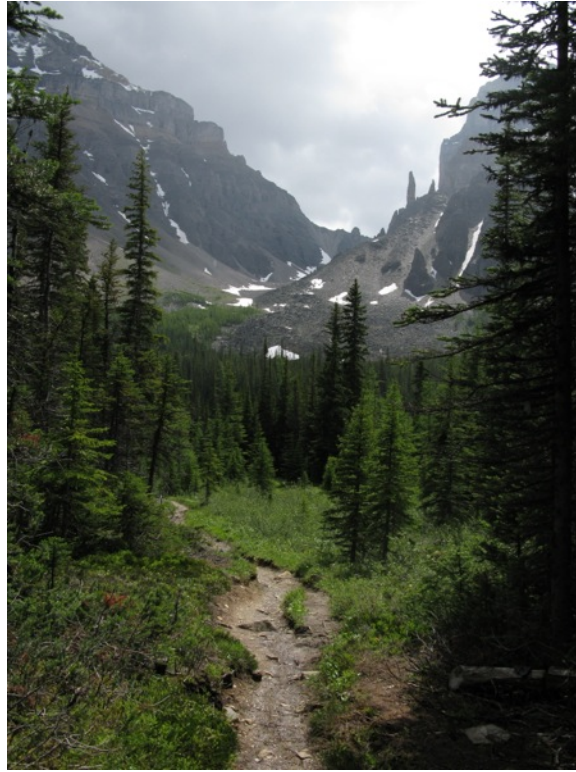

One last photo of the falls:

We headed back around the loop through the campground; this would be a very scenic (and wet) place to camp:

The trail back through here was more of a small creek than a trail at this point. Notice that we are heading directly for Sentinel Pass in this photo:

Looking over towards Wenkchemna Peak (right):

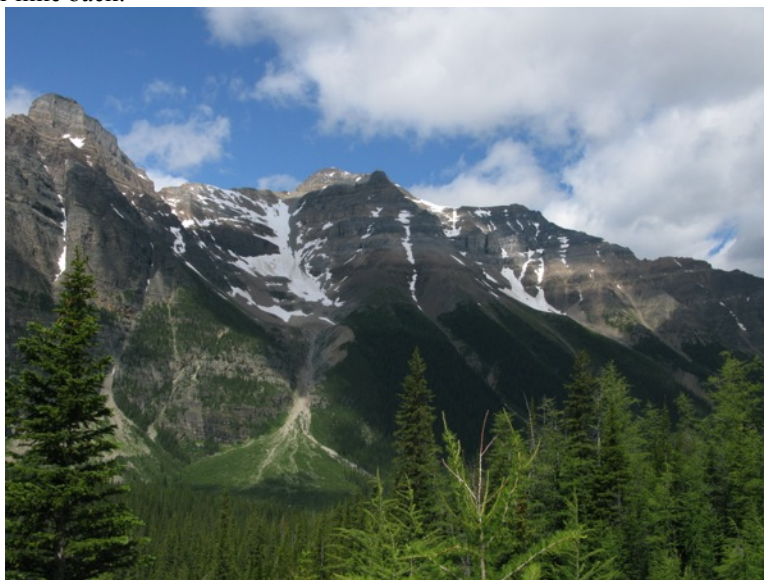

Zooming in on this area, which would be an interesting future hike:

Looking up Paradise Creek:

It finally stopped raining on our hike back:

These nice flowers were near the Paradise Creek on the way back:

