

The Ridge North of Rock Nettle Canyon

We followed the ridge seen in the center of the photo up until it reached where the canyon enters more solid rock and the ridge starts to become steeper:

The first northern side canyon of Rock Nettle Canyon:

Looking up this side canyon:

Looking further up the side canyon from where we gained the ridge:

The side canyon appears to pass through some reddish areas:

Interesting rock on the ridge:

This is a fairly easy ridge to follow to get some good views:

Looking back down the side canyon as seen from the ridge:

Panorama into Rock Nettle Canyon above where the side slot takes off:

A view into the main Rock Nettle Canyon above the major impasse:

Panorama of Rock Nettle Canyon:

Another view into the canyon:

This is where the ridge starts to get steep; we decided not to ascend the steep spot and rather turn around at the saddle just before it started to get steeper, as it was getting late:

Zooming in on another impasse in the canyon:

One more view of the canyon:

Looking back along the ridge:

Nice colors on a mud-mound section of the ridge on the way back:

Looking towards Furnace Creek on the walk back down the alluvial fan:

