

THIMBLE PEAK

View from Red Pass; the Thimble Peak trail ascends the “hill” to the left:

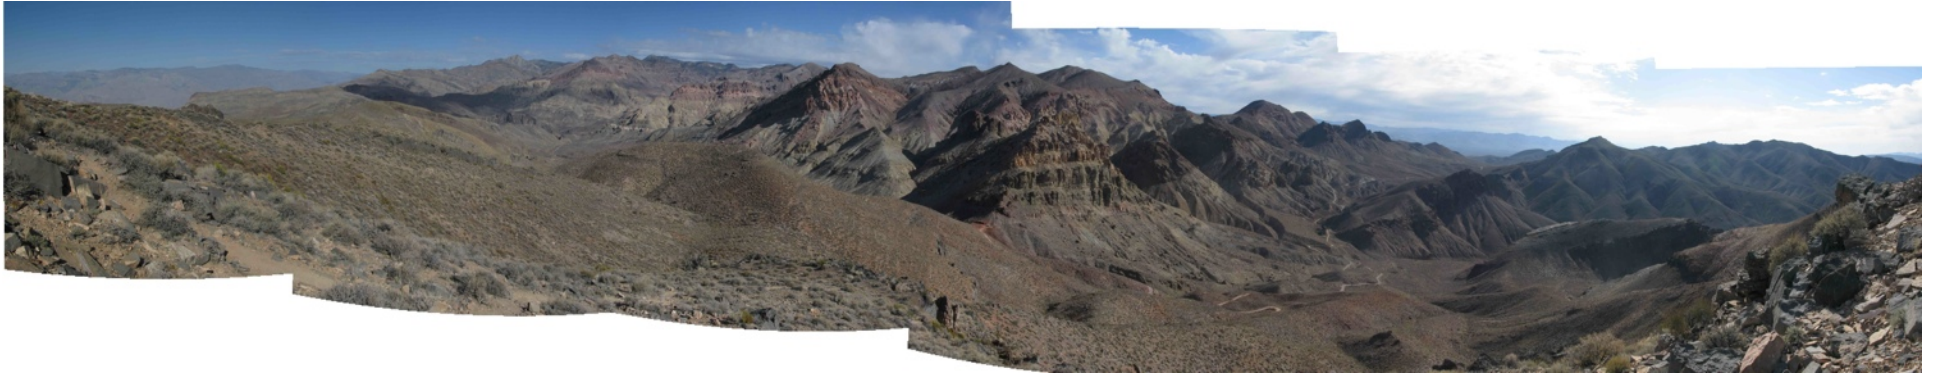

Looking down at the road from this “hill”:

Looking over at the next “hill” which the trail ascends:

Panorama from this second “hill”:

Our first view of Thimble Peak from this trail:

Looking towards Palmer (back left) and Wahguyhe (back right):

Panorama towards Thimble as we near the high point which is just before the drop down to the saddle below Thimble:

Thimble Peak looks quite difficult to climb from this angle; however, I think the only difficult section of the trail is the last steep climb near the top, which I decided not to do because of high winds:

Looking up towards Thimble from the saddle below:

Looking back at the last high point before Thimble, from a little over half-way to the top of Thimble from the saddle:

Panorama looking towards the last part of the climb:

I think this is the only difficult part of the climb; due to 40 mph winds with gusts, I decided not to climb it (I will be making another trip back on a non-windy day, however!), but one member of the group did climb up to get photos:

Panorama from where I stopped below the top of Thimble:

Looking at the other side of Thimble, where the cave is:

Looking towards the upper reaches of “Fall 2” Canyon (you can read about my attempt to hike into the upper part of this canyon in my TR from April 2012, “Titus Side Canyon,”; to read about the lower part of this canyon, see my TR from January 2012 “Fall 2”):

View of the valley from the top of the peak:

Looking down from the saddle below Thimble Peak:

A horned lizard which we saw on the hike back:

Zooming in on the top of Thimble Peak from the top of the “hill” that is just after the saddle on the way back:

Panorama looking towards Titanothere Canyon and Thimble Peak from this "hill":

Looking at the road in to Titus Canyon on our way back to the car:

