

TUCKI MINE, AGUEREBERRY POINT, AND SKIDOO

As it was a warm April trip to DV, we decided to check out some locations in higher elevations which we had not visited recently. We drove out the Telephone Canyon Road to Tucki Mine, then also checked out the road which goes off to the east from above Tucki Mine. We next drove to Aguerberry Point, from which we took some excellent panoramas of the valley. Finally, we drove out to Skidoo and explored some of the mining ruins there.

Mine workings up on the hill at Tucki Mine:

Looking back towards the mine buildings from below the mine:

Looking down towards the valley out Tucki Wash:

Looking up the road which goes off towards the east but is blocked to vehicle traffic at the top of the hill; we decided it was too steep to drive, so we walked this road to where it is blocked to vehicle traffic:

Panorama looking back from the top of the hill seen in the previous picture:

Panorama of the view which can be seen from where this road is closed to vehicle traffic:

Zooming in on the Old Martin Cabin, which can be seen from where we stopped:

From here, we drove to Aguerberry Point. Panorama of the valley from Aguerberry Point:

Panorama of the upper reaches of Blackwater Wash and Trail Canyon:

Zooming in on the upper Black Mountains:

Zooming in on the Broken Pick Millsite of Trail Canyon:

Looking down the old road into Trail Canyon:

Skidoo Quartz Mill:

Mines at Skidoo:

Panorama of the view looking north from Skidoo:

