

Undertaker Canyon

Looking at the boulder jam from near Hole-in-the-Wall:

The first stage of the boulder jam. I've heard that it is also possible to climb up from the far right side of the jam, underneath the "boulder arch," but I chose to go around the left side of the jam:

Second stage of the boulder jam:

There is a boulder pile that must be climbed just after the second stage. Then, there is the third stage:

I found the fourth stage (which I didn't get a photo of) to be the most difficult because of the height, although the climbing itself was easier than that in the other stages. Entering the narrows:

9-foot fall in the narrows:

More narrows photos:

The canyon opens up after the narrows, and it is an easy walk in the wash to Widowmaker Dryfalls:

The gigantic Widowmaker dryfalls as seen from a distance:

Lots of Coyote melons at the base of the falls:

Looking towards Hole-in-the-Wall on our way down the boulder jam:

